

The restaurant in the heart of Trastevere: Meo Patacca

Typical Roman restaurant in the heart of Trastevere (city centre). History is everywhere at Meo Patacca: the rich and fascinating history of the city, but above all the history of the Roman people and its age-old traditions: lighting in the restaurant is in the form of gas lamps, oil lamps, candles and soft lights; waiters are decked out in garments of the time to evoke the characteristic and picturesque atmosphere of an early 19th century inn.

Every evening professional musicians wander from table to table entertaining clients with Roman songs, japes and ditties. For the past 50 years the restaurant Meo Patacca has served typical Roman dishes. Among pasta dishes the “Amatriciana” is proposed in a number of varieties, then there is maccheroni with ricotta cheese, bucatini alla carbonara, rigatoni cacio e pepe (cheese and pepper) and hot soups containing legumes, vegetables and potatoes.

First place in the “hit parade” of vegetables goes to artichokes, cooked whole “alla romana” or sliced up and fried.
